Top 5 Priorities for HR Leaders in 2023

Gartner surveyed more than 800 HR leaders across 60 countries and all major industries to identify their priorities and challenges for 2023. The largest share of respondents put “leader and manager effectiveness” on their list, but many HR leaders will also prioritize organizational design and change management, employee experience, recruiting and future of work.

What Is Driving These Priorities?

Organizations face uncertain and confusing times
Executives are facing a “triple-squeeze” of pressures:

1. Rising inflation: 90% of CEOs expect it to rise significantly within the next 12 months.
2. Scarce, expensive talent: 50% of HR leaders expect increased talent competition over the next six months.
3. Global supply constraints: 48% of CFOs believe supply chain volatility and shortages will last beyond 2022.

HR leaders must weigh many trade-offs
HR leaders have to manage investments in people and technology, cultivating a positive culture and employee experience, and transform HR to be more automated and digital at the same time.

New employee expectations impact retention and attraction

- Flexibility: 52% of employees say flexible work policies will affect their decision to stay at their organizations.¹
- Shared purpose: 53% of employees want their organizations to take actions on issues they care about.²
- Well-being: 70% of companies have introduced new well-being benefits or increased the amount of existing well-being benefits.³
- Person-first experience: 82% of employees say it’s important for their organization to see them as a person, not just as an employee.⁴

Leaders Need a New Approach

As today’s work environment changes, leadership must change, as well. The three environmental shifts of social and political turbulence, work-life fusion and flexible work arrangements are redefining the leader-employee dynamic into a human-to-human relationship.

The Human-Centric Leader

The human-to-human dynamic in the workplace pushes leaders to display human-centric leadership, defined as leading with authenticity, empathy and adaptivity. These traits have been listed for some time among the key qualities of great leaders — but they were considered nice to have. Employees today demand them.

Authentic
Act with purpose and enable true self-expression for themselves and their teams.

Empathetic
Show genuine care, respect and concern for employee well-being.

Adaptive
Enable flexibility and support that fit the unique needs of team members.

Change Fatigue and Work Friction Are Driving Attrition

CHROs are prioritizing organizational design and change management to navigate continuous disruption from digital transformations, economic uncertainty and political tensions. After years of such disruption, however, employees are losing their willingness to cooperate with change. Worse yet is the fact that high employee “change fatigue” and increased work friction points are correlated with a lower intent to stay with the organization: Only 43% of employees who experience above-average change fatigue intend to stay with their organization, compared with 74% of employees with low levels of fatigue.

New imperative

Adopt an Open-Source Change Strategy

CHROs can decrease change fatigue and support employees through periods of uncertainty with an open-source change strategy — one that is less prescriptive than top-down approaches and more collaborative, involving employees throughout the process instead of simply telling them what will happen. Organizations using open-source change strategies are 14x times more likely to achieve change success. They see the risk of change fatigue in their employees fall by 29 percentage points and employee intent to stay increase by as much as 19 percentage points.

Compelling Careers Are Critical for Retention

Data from a Gartner survey on employee career preferences shows that just one in four employees is confident about their career at their organization, and three out of four people looking for a new role are interested in external positions.

Sourcing and Onboarding Against Attrition

Employee recruitment teams must grapple with the reality of low supply and low retention in today's hybrid-driven labor market.

Recruiting High-Quality Talent in Today's Labor Market Reality

- Continued Surge in Demand
  Talent supply is low in traditional talent pools.

- New Normal for Attrition
  Retaining talent in a hybrid or remote environment is more difficult.

- Candidate Agency
  Candidates are harder to attract and convert.

New imperative

Leading in a Volatile Labor Market

Three strategies for more effective recruitment include leveraging labor market data to find accessible talent from new sources, building an equitable internal labor market and developing onboarding programs that promote new hire engagement through emotional proximity.

Build an intelligence-based sourcing capability
- Find accessible, not just available, talent with labor market intelligence.
- Identify alternate skills, locations and roles that may be able to do the job.
- Use competitive intelligence to position EVP effectively.

Create an equitable internal labor market
- Target potential in the internal, not just external, labor market first.
- Expand equitable opportunity in the internal market.
- Incentivize managers’ support for mobility.

Build onboarding for engagement
- Create emotional proximity by connecting to the organization’s mission.
- Tailor onboarding to the needs of the individual.

Workforce Planning Is Disconnected From Today’s Reality

The assumptions around which workforce planning (WFP) has operated no longer hold in today’s environment. As a result, the strategies we are using are ineffective in today’s context.

Match Your Planning to Today’s Reality

Instead of assuming we can predict future skills needs, access enough talent, fill future gaps by buying and building, and dictate when and where employees work, we need a new approach that unlocks new strategies.
